Hiring the right people is the first vital step in order to create effective teams and achieve long-term organizational success. Therefore, there is little doubt that recruitment and selection is one of the most critical responsibilities of HR Executives. This course concentrates on all major aspects of recruitment and selection. Through research-based and well-grounded theory as well as practical tools, it provides a thorough and comprehensive coverage of key issues, such as developing strategies to attract suitable candidates and win the war for talent, employer branding, the importance of using a range of selection methods, as well as the role of socialization and induction. Additionally, it will engage students in a learning process, so as to develop their competencies in crucial aspects associated with employee selection, such as effective interviewing techniques.

HR 6031  ADVANCED TOPICS IN HUMAN RESOURCE MANAGEMENT  3 CREDITS

Course Description
The trend away from personnel management to strategic HRM is gathering momentum and HR professionals increasingly need to demonstrate their value to the Board of Directors. In view of these challenges, this advanced course examines a variety of selected contemporary HRM topics and is designed to offer participants the opportunity to keep abreast with the latest developments in the HRM field. Indicative areas, which will be explored, include talent management, coaching, as well as HRM metrics and benchmarking, managing redundancies and outplacement, and international HRM.

HR 6061  STRATEGIC HUMAN RESOURCE MANAGEMENT  3 CREDITS

Course Description
Human Resources Management introduces students to basic as well as advanced concepts in Human Resource Management (HRM). It is divided into three parts: “Theories”, then “Content” and, finally, “Contemporary Issues” in HRM. Through this approach, the module provides an introduction to HRM, examines key policies and systems used to manage people and discusses contemporary issues. It addresses major topics, such as the link between business strategy and HRM, the impact of HRM on business performance, recruitment, appraisal, balanced scorecard, compensation, benefits and organizational culture. Using theories, research evidence, and practical tools (case studies, videos and guest speakers), students will understand and evaluate Human Resources Management in practice.
