Thinking Without the Box: Reshaping Business Reality

Organised by the students of the School of Business.

Organizations around the world are changing the way they do business. Companies are struggling financially, employees are being laid off, customers exhibit totally new expectations and patterns of behavior, and the external environment and competition are forcing organizations to innovate, "think without the box", and find new ways to respond to new business realities. To remain competitive, organizations and leaders need to shift their mind-set. In that context, the Business Week Annual Forum, organized by the Business Academic Societies of the American College of Greece, has invited professionals and researchers from industry and academia to address practices that can help organizations successfully adapt to an ever-changing business landscape. The ACG Business Week 2013 Forum organized by students of the School of Business will bear the theme of Reshaping Business Reality: Thinking without the Box, and will be held this week. For program details, please refer to the ACG website: www.acg.edu/sites/default/files/pdfs/BusinessWeek2013Program.pdf
